

First American Plastic Earns Recertification of QA System

/EINPresswire.com/ Leading Illinois plastics manufacturer receives three-year recertification of its quality management system.

First American Plastic Molding Enterprise, an Illinois-based leader in custom injection molding, has earned its ISO 9001:2008 recertification based on the excellence of its quality management system. The certification, which lasts for three years, is a testament to First American Plastic's adherence to the quality management principles that comprise the standard.

"We're proud to qualify for recertification because of what that recertification represents," said Steve Erickson, a vice president at First American Plastic. "At our company, we are committed to a strong customer focus, motivated management, fully working processes, and a desire for continual improvement—all things that the evaluation looks for and has been able to show that we do well."

The ISO 9001:2008 certification, which sets criteria for both small and large organizations across all types of fields, thoroughly evaluates companies regarding management, quality of customer service, approach to processes, and evidence of improvement. The certification identifies businesses from which customers can expect quality products and services time and time again.

"Our clients can count on First American Plastic," Erickson said. "Not only do we deliver consistent results, but we also focus our expertise and experience on constantly improving our services and offerings."

Established in 1993, First American Plastic Molding Enterprise holds many certifications in addition to the ISO 9001:2008. A Certified Minority Business Enterprise, it is also certified in diverse industries such as Dairy, Automotive, Consumer, Medical, and original equipment manufacturing (OEM).
