MIAMI, FL, UNITED STATES, September 22, 2026 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Young Thug is launching Primal, a new creative holding company focused on building businesses with some of the most influential artists, athletes, and creators in culture.

Primal is designed around a simple idea: talent should participate in the long-term value of the businesses, brands, and intellectual property they help create.

Rather than operating as a traditional management company, agency, or endorsement platform, Primal will work alongside talent to create new IP, acquire existing businesses, invest capital, build infrastructure, and scale ventures into meaningful standalone companies.

“I’m bringing up a new generation of founders. I want talent to build, own, and keep the upside. Ownership over endorsements,” Young Thug said.

The platform will focus on opportunities where talent can move beyond promotion and into true ownership.

Artists. Athletes. Creators. Founders.

Young Thug has already demonstrated that model through SP5DER, the fashion and lifestyle brand he founded in Atlanta. The brand has grown into a global streetwear name and in 2026 launched a multi-release global collaboration with adidas Originals, including a football-inspired collection brought to life through a campaign featuring Spanish football star Lamine Yamal.

Primal will identify concepts, products, businesses, and intellectual property with the potential to become culturally relevant companies, then bring together the capital, creative development, operating resources, partnerships, and distribution needed to accelerate them.

The company expects to operate across categories including consumer products, sports, entertainment, media, fashion, technology, hospitality, licensing, and emerging cultural businesses.

"At the highest level, talent has always created value. Primal is about creating the structure for the talent to own more of that value," Young Thug added.

The launch reflects a broader shift across sports and entertainment as artists and athletes increasingly move from endorsement relationships toward equity, intellectual property ownership, and company creation.

Primal intends to live at the center of that transition.

Its model brings together capital, intellectual property, and creative infrastructure, giving talent the resources to launch companies from the ground up while also providing a platform for acquiring and scaling businesses that already exist.

The company will selectively partner with artists, athletes, creators, operators, investors, and strategic brands whose influence, expertise, and distribution can help accelerate each venture.

Primal's portfolio will be intentionally curated, with the platform focused on building fewer, larger opportunities rather than functioning as a high-volume incubator.

The result is a new kind of talent business platform: one built not around campaigns or sponsorships, but around ownership.
