

Dallas Trade Show Displays Provider Continues Charitable Donations with Help from Local Volunteers

/EINPresswire.com/ On the heels of Skyline DFW's largest charitable donation to date, the Fort Worth trade show display provider expands its community outreach programs to make giving easier than ever

GRAND PRAIRIE, TX-- In the weeks following a monumental undertaking for one of the largest military fundraisers in the country, Skyline DFW has aligned itself with the community and several charitable organizations for the holidays thanks to the Dallas trade show booth company's most powerful asset, its people. By the end of 2012 Skyline DFW and community volunteers will have donated over 400 lbs. of nourishment to local food banks and enough units of blood to have played instrumental roles in sustaining the lives of over 100 people. Skyline DFW CEO, Jeff Meisner, accredits the Dallas trade show display company's ability to achieve these acts of humanitarianism to his employees and the similarities they share in their desire to help. "Skyline DFW's core values of honesty, integrity, professionalism, leadership, education, and teamwork have allowed us to excel in our industry for more than a decade and this team of generous individuals embodies those values. Their interest in positively affecting the lives of those in need reflects the quality of character we look for and highly value. To see that many have philanthropic interests and are willing to make a difference reflects that their personal values match our organization's core values. I feel truly blessed to be a part of this remarkable team."

Skyline DFW's community outreach message is one of inclusion and collaboration with charitable organizations, local businesses, and citizens. "We post all of our events on Skyline DFW's Facebook page and frequently invite neighboring businesses and citizens to participate. We feel that it is part of our corporate responsibility not only give back to the community, but to facilitate and amplify the contributions of others as well," said Skyline DFW's Office Manager, Gina Gober. Skyline DFW and its employees have a history of participating in community service events with associations like Habitat for Humanity, Students Achieving Independent Learning, Grapevine Relief and Community Exchange, and Campfire USA. Recent alliances with the North Texas Food Bank, Carter Blood Care, and Toys for Tots have increased opportunities for local businesses and community volunteers to participate in Skyline DFW's community outreach program and show support for these humanitarian efforts. Skyline DFW's community outreach charities are usually selected by the company's team members.
