Adega Gaucha Puts Churrasco on the Table at a Florida Gathering of Brazilian Business Leaders

Co-founder and CEO Ricardo Oliveira represents the steakhouse as CFBACC and the Consulate General of Brazil in Miami convene the community.

ORLANDO, FL, UNITED STATES, September 10, 2026 / EINPresswire.com/ -- On Tuesday, September 8, 2026, the Central Florida Brazilian American Chamber of Commerce (CFBACC) and the Consulate General of Brazil in Miami brought Brazilian business owners and community leaders together for a gathering focused on connection, conversation, and the strength of Brazil's business community in Florida. Adega Gaucha joined the event in a role that felt especially natural for a Brazilian steakhouse: bringing the churrasco to the table.

Adega Gaucha sponsored the catering for the gathering, with co-founder and CEO Ricardo Oliveira representing the company and helping introduce other Brazilian entrepreneurs working across Florida. Rather than using the occasion as a traditional corporate presentation, the restaurant approached the evening through food, hospitality, and relationships, the same values that have shaped its identity since opening its first Orlando restaurant in 2021.

Guests experienced the Southern Brazilian churrasco that Adega Gaucha serves across its Florida restaurants, with fire-roasted meats prepared in the Gaucho tradition and served as part of the brand's signature dining experience. The meal offered more than a taste of Brazilian cuisine; it created a familiar point of connection for members of a community that continues to grow throughout Central Florida and beyond.

For many attendees, the flavors were already familiar. Adega Gaucha has become a gathering place for Brazilian families, business owners, local guests, and visitors who return for celebrations, client dinners, and occasions shared around the Gourmet Table. At the CFBACC gathering, some of those familiar guests were in the room not only as entrepreneurs but also as longtime customers and supporters of the restaurant.

"We did not show up to lecture anyone about community," Oliveira said. "We showed up to feed people we already cook for. Some of the owners in that room have been coming since the first Orlando dining room opened. If the Chamber and the Consulate are doing the hard work of connecting Brazilian business in Florida, the least we can do is keep the table full."

That approach reflects a broader role that Adega Gaucha has embraced as the company has grown. The restaurant was founded in Orlando in 2021, followed by a Kissimmee location in 2024 and a third Florida restaurant in Deerfield Beach in 2025. A fourth location is planned for Dunwoody, Georgia, continuing the company's expansion while maintaining its connection to the Brazilian culinary traditions that inspired the brand.

Oliveira used the gathering to shine a light on the wider Brazilian business community rather than focusing on the company's own growth. Brazilian-owned businesses contribute across Florida's restaurant, hospitality, professional services, retail, technology, construction, and other sectors, creating networks that extend well beyond individual companies.

"Florida's Brazilian business community is bigger than one steakhouse," Oliveira said. "Yesterday the job was simple. Cook. Make introductions. Leave people a little better fed than when they arrived."

The event also reflects why food continues to play such an important role in Brazilian culture and community life. Churrasco is traditionally associated with gathering around fire, sharing food, and taking time around the table. At Adega Gaucha, those traditions are expressed through Gaucho-style service, premium cuts prepared over an open flame, a Gourmet Table, and a hospitality approach designed to make guests feel welcome.

Today, guests can experience Adega Gaucha at locations in Orlando, Kissimmee, and Deerfield Beach, with each restaurant bringing the brand's Southern Brazilian culinary identity into its local community. The company's current menu and dining experience feature more than 17 premium meat cuts, handpicked wines, and the Gourmet Table, reinforcing the connection between Brazilian culinary tradition and a modern steakhouse setting.

Brazilian Restaurant

For Adega Gaucha, sponsoring the CFBACC and Consulate gathering was therefore less about making a statement and more about participating in something the company already values: bringing people together. As the Brazilian business community continues to build relationships across Florida, the restaurant intends to remain part of those conversations — sometimes through introductions, sometimes through partnerships, and sometimes simply by making sure there is good food on the table.
