Influential Women Profiles Gabriela Paez: Helping Businesses Scale Through Strategic Nearshore Talent Solutions

THE WOODLANDS, TX, UNITED STATES, September 22, 2026 / EINPresswire.com/ -- A People-First Consultant, Gabriela Combines Strategic Talent Solutions, Discipline, and Long-Term Thinking to Help Organizations Grow

The Woodlands, Texas – Gabriela "Gabby" Paez is a business consultant and entrepreneur who has spent more than a decade helping organizations address one of the most persistent challenges in business: finding and retaining high-quality talent. Specializing in nearshore consulting for the legal and professional services sectors, Gabriela connects U.S. businesses with highly qualified professionals across Latin America, helping organizations access talent while creating meaningful career opportunities for professionals around the world.

Her approach is grounded in a straightforward philosophy: people have to be treated right, and businesses should pursue solutions that genuinely serve their needs. For Gabriela, consulting is not simply about closing the next deal or maximizing a personal opportunity. It is about understanding what a client needs, determining whether the right solution can be provided, and being willing to work with other consultants when a different resource may be better positioned to help.

That commitment to doing right by clients has become one of the foundations of Gabriela's career. She believes that when a solution does not make sense or does not represent the best option for the customer, there is no reason to force it. Instead, she focuses on relationships, collaboration, and creating outcomes that are beneficial for the businesses and professionals involved.

Gabriela's entrepreneurial mindset began early. Even before establishing her professional career, she looked for creative ways to earn income and develop business skills. Her education at Miami Dade College, where she earned an associate degree, and Florida International University, where she earned a Bachelor of Business Administration, provided a foundation for the business and financial knowledge that would later shape her career.

She began professionally in the financial services industry in Miami, where she progressed from a receptionist to a funding manager at a private finance company. That early experience gave her firsthand exposure to business operations, financial decision-making, client relationships, and the different challenges organizations encounter as they grow.

Over the years, her consulting work increasingly exposed her to another critical business issue: talent. Companies could have strong strategies and ambitious growth plans, but their ability to execute those plans depended heavily on having the right people in place. This realization eventually led Gabriela to concentrate on nearshore workforce solutions.

Today, she works with business owners, attorneys, private equity professionals, bankers, and referral partners to help organizations develop high-performing teams while maintaining sustainable growth. Through nearshoring, U.S. companies can connect with skilled professionals in Latin America, creating opportunities to expand their capabilities and develop more scalable workforce models.

Gabriela views this as both a business opportunity and a way to create positive outcomes for individuals. Her work connects companies seeking talent with professionals seeking meaningful career opportunities, creating a relationship in which both sides can benefit.

As she continues educating businesses about nearshore talent strategies, Gabriela frequently participates in conferences and speaking engagements. She also remains active in professional networking organizations, including ProVisors and Momentum Networking Group in South Florida. These communities reflect another principle that has played an important role in her career: the importance of building and nurturing strong relationships.

Gabriela considers networking one of the most valuable pieces of career advice she has received. Meaningful professional relationships can open doors to opportunities, partnerships, and guidance, while also providing access to people who can offer different perspectives and experiences. For Gabriela, networking is not simply about collecting contacts; it is about developing relationships that can grow over time.

Her advice to young women entering the industry follows a similarly entrepreneurial philosophy. Gabriela encourages professionals to approach every opportunity with the mindset of an owner.

Even when working for someone else, she believes individuals should treat the company as though it were their own and look for ways to contribute beyond the minimum expectations.

She describes this mindset as being a true “intrapreneur” when someone is not an entrepreneur. By taking ownership of their responsibilities, seeking opportunities to improve the business, and consistently striving to perform at a high level, professionals can gain valuable experience and become people their organizations can rely on.

For Gabriela, discipline is an essential part of that process. She does not believe long-term success can depend solely on motivation because motivation naturally fluctuates. Instead, she emphasizes discipline and commitment to long-term goals. When circumstances become difficult or enthusiasm fades, discipline provides the consistency necessary to continue moving forward.

This philosophy also shapes the way Gabriela approaches her own professional growth. She believes that making yourself uncomfortable is an important part of development. Throughout her career, she has intentionally said yes to opportunities that might initially feel uncomfortable or outside her comfort zone. While it can be easier to decline such opportunities, Gabriela believes that accepting them often creates experiences that ultimately contribute to personal and professional growth.

That willingness to step outside familiar territory has helped Gabriela continue evolving as a consultant and entrepreneur. Rather than focusing exclusively on immediate results, she emphasizes playing the long game. Sustainable progress, in her view, comes from consistently making thoughtful decisions, learning through experience, maintaining relationships, and remaining committed even when the results are not immediate.

The same long-term perspective informs her view of the current business environment. Gabriela identifies talent acquisition and retention as major challenges for organizations today. At the same time, she sees nearshoring as an important opportunity for companies seeking skilled professionals and more scalable workforce strategies.

By helping businesses connect with qualified talent across Latin America, Gabriela is positioned at the intersection of business growth, workforce strategy, and international professional opportunity. Her work demonstrates how a people-centered approach can coexist with practical business objectives.

Ultimately, Gabriela’s career is defined by a combination of entrepreneurship, relationship-building, discipline, and a commitment to doing what is right for the client. From her early experiences in financial services to her current work advising organizations on nearshore talent, she has continued to embrace growth opportunities while maintaining a focus on long-term value.

For Gabriela, success is not measured solely by quick wins. It is reflected in the strength of the relationships she develops, the opportunities she helps create, and the businesses and professionals she supports along the way. By staying committed to her principles and continuing to challenge herself, she remains focused on helping organizations grow while creating meaningful opportunities for the people who make that growth possible.
