

Rangemaster is approved and recommended by the Energy Saving Trust...

/EINPresswire.com/ UK (submitpressrelease123.com - press release) Rangemaster has become the first cooker manufacturer to be approved and recommended by the leading not-for-profit group, the Energy Saving Trust, for its commitment to environmental sustainability.

The Energy Saving Trust chose to recognise Rangemaster's efforts to ensure that its entire range of dual-fuel and induction range cookers were among the most eco-friendly available. In order to secure the Energy Saving Trust's approval, Rangemaster's collection of range cookers were subjected to a series of rigorous tests aimed at ensuring they lived up to the Trust's high standards.

"As a company, Rangemaster places great importance on environmental sustainability, so we were delighted to receive the approval of the Energy Saving Trust," said Holly Johnson, Marketing Manager for Rangemaster. "The Energy Saving Trust's standards are widely regarded as a key benchmark for sustainability, so the fact that we've won their approval really vindicates everything we've been doing to ensure that our cookers are energy efficient and kind to the environment."

The Energy Saving Trust provides free and impartial advice on how to improve energy efficiency. Its Energy Saving Recommended Scheme provides information on eco-friendly appliances. Not just any product can win Energy Saving Trust approval - in fact, a number of demanding criteria are in place to ensure that appliances meet the highest energy efficiency standards. Having won the approval of the Energy Saving Trust, information about recommended Rangemaster products can be found on the organisation's website.

The Energy Saving Trust deems Rangemaster cookers eco-friendly, and that's not approval that is earned easily. Homeowners on the lookout for energy efficient appliances should take a look at what the company has to offer. What's more, the Rangemaster collection includes a wide range of different designs and colours, so there's bound to be at least one that's perfect for any home.
