ST. The collaboration brings together two organizations committed to reimagining the divorce experience by replacing uncertainty, financial strain, and lengthy legal proceedings with more transparent, efficient, and family-centered approaches.

Founded by divorce attorney and entrepreneur Amanda Mason, SOLAGREE has developed a three-phase, structured divorce model that provides clients with more predictable timelines, lower costs, and greater confidence throughout the divorce process.

"As a divorce attorney, I observed for years how desperately people needed better resources and a better process," said Amanda Mason, CEO and co-founder of SOLAGREE. "My work with SOLAGREE has helped me discover meaningful ways to provide stronger options to people during one of the most difficult periods of their lives."

SOLAGREE's model begins with an empowerment phase that helps clients better understand their finances, validate parenting roles, and develop a clear vision for the future. Rather than leaving individuals in an informational vacuum, the process emphasizes education and preparation, allowing clients to make informed decisions with greater confidence.

The second phase focuses on maximizing settlement opportunities through mediation, ensuring that participants enter discussions fully prepared. In the final phase, a neutral attorney serving as an arbitrator efficiently creates legally binding agreements and resolves any remaining disputed issues, helping families avoid lengthy court delays and unnecessary legal expenses.

“It's a joy to know what we've saved these clients from. The endless time and money of classic approaches just leave a black cloud over their heads while they wait around going broke," Mason added.

A key component of the partnership is NASDF's Support Insured, which protects child support and alimony recipients from unexpected financial disruptions caused by events such as death, disability, involuntary unemployment, or business bankruptcy.

"The confidence that support payments will continue, even during unforeseen circumstances, is truly a game changer for families," said Mason. "It strengthens settlement discussions and provides peace of mind for both parties. I look forward to expanding our programs together."

Founded by Ronald Platt, NASDF is a nonprofit organization dedicated to improving the lives of single and divorced families through access to affordable services, educational resources, mental health support, career guidance, financial tools, and family-focused programs.

"Families navigating divorce deserve more than outdated systems and fragmented resources," said Ronald Platt, founder of NASDF. "Our partnership with SOLAGREE represents a significant step toward creating a more supportive and effective pathway for individuals and families as they rebuild their lives."

Through the partnership, NASDF members will gain access to educational resources and innovative divorce solutions developed by SOLAGREE, while both organizations will collaborate on future initiatives designed to improve outcomes for families across the United States.
