

Digital Music Distributor Scotch Tapes To Launch May 1st

/EINPresswire.com/ Scotch Tapes introduces a platform designed to promote artists without the assistance of a major label

Digital music distributor Scotch Tapes will roll out its new music distribution model for independent artists on May 1st. The brainchild of entrepreneurs Ryan White, Adam Koestel and Gilli Conway, Scotch Tapes offers a unique approach to its subscribers and hip hop artists.

Aspiring hip hop artists don't have to wait for major record labels to sign them and Scotch Tapes subscribers are no longer stuck sifting through over-commercialized music.

"This is a great alternative for indie artists," says Ryan White. "Our distribution platform is unique because not only does it split the profits of each sale with the artists, but we're also promoting their music on our website and in the daily emails sent to subscribers."

Unlike other digital music distributors, Scotch Tapes subscribers are invited to listen to new music that's delivered to their email once a day. Subscribers have the option of purchasing music they like for only 79 cents per track. Artist can also capitalize off of being an independent act and online promotion, in addition to making a percentage of each sale.

Scotch Tapes is now offering the first 10,000 subscribers fifty percent off all tracks forever. To get an overview of the service and to sign up visit www.skotchtapes.com

For media personnel interested in learning more about Scotch Tapes, a private sneak peek of the service is available upon request.

Scotch Tapes

Scotch Tapes is a digital music distributor and social buying platform catering to hip hop artists and their fans. Its commonly referred to as the Groupon for music.

For the artists, Skotch Tapes offers an attractive opportunity. Artists can get their music in front of a large captive audience subscribed to Skotch Tapes daily emails. For the fans, Skotch Tapes removes the digging. The team screens thousands of song submissions and carefully selects the top one percent to feature on their 'Artist of The Day'.

Subscribers get only the best of the best delivered to them daily.

Skotch Tapes removes the clutter from Hip Hop. They empower artists by featuring one track each day. They deliver this exclusive content to their members through Email, iPhone, Android, and Facebook Apps. Users choose which tracks they want to purchase and download. At just 79 cents, it's the best deal in music.
