

All-in-One Credit Card Processor BluePay Goes Pink for the Cure

/EINPresswire.com/ BluePay, a leading payment processor, continues the fight against breast cancer by donating to the Chicagoland affiliate of Susan G. Komen for the Cure.

Chicagoland's leading credit card processor is continuing the fight against breast cancer with renewed support of cancer treatment and research in 2013. For the fourth year running, BluePay is donating a portion of its profits from new merchant accounts to the Chicagoland affiliate of Susan G. Komen for the Cure, a foundation dedicated to education and research about causes, treatments, and potential cures for cancer. Every time a new merchant signs up with BluePay, a portion of the monies earned goes directly to contributing to the cure.

"We're proud to partner with the Chicagoland Susan G. Komen for the Cure program—not only because of what the foundation stands for, but also because it's a way for us to give back to our community beyond advanced credit card processing," said John Rante, CEO of BluePay. "Supporting the cure aligns perfectly with the BluePay mission of benefiting our clients. Now, in addition to giving local companies the tools they need for growth, we're also donating a percentage of our profits to an organization dedicated to making the world better for all of us."

To assist breast cancer research, BluePay is donating a percentage of its net first-year revenue from every new merchant account. Merchants face no additional charges or fees; the money comes directly out of BluePay's profits. Simply by signing up for and using BluePay's full suite of secure credit card processing services, merchants support efforts to secure important grants for cancer screening, treatment, education, and research.

A credit card processing company committed to serving merchants in all industries, BluePay offers a wide range of payment processing solutions, including mobile credit card processing, electronic billing and invoicing, secure hosted payment forms, tokenization, end-to-end encryption, batch credit card processing, virtual terminals, and more.

"We're essentially an all-in-one credit card processor," said Rante. "And we're as committed to serving our community as we are to giving merchants safe, secure, simple payment processing solutions.”
