Trinity Consultants, an international environmental consulting firm that specializes in industrial air quality issues, recently opened an office in Sheboygan, Wis., to better serve Wisconsin clients. The office will be led by Thomas Henning, PE, CHMM, an environmental professional with 20 years of experience in project management, permit negotiations, regulatory compliance, and air emission control. Mr. Henning has prepared more than 200 air permit applications, compliance evaluations, and air dispersion modeling analyses for facilities located in Wisconsin. He has supported facilities in a wide variety of industries, including wastewater treatment, mining and metals, wood products, landfills, power, automotive, and food processing. He is the co-chair of the Federation of Environmental Technologists' Air Quality Committee and a frequent presenter and instructor on federal and state air quality regulations.

According to Clay Raasch, Director of Trinity's Upper Midwest Operations, "It will be a real benefit to both Trinity and our Wisconsin clients to have Tom at the helm of our local office there. He is well-regarded among the environmental and business community for his technical expertise, ability to keep projects on track and within budget, and commitment to client service. He will also be a great mentor to junior staff as we grow our Wisconsin operations."

Trinity already serves numerous clients in Wisconsin on a wide range of local issues, including Wisconsin air permits and air permitting exemptions, air dispersion modeling analyses, emissions inventories, environmental compliance and reporting, and ambient air monitoring. Tom will continue Trinity's valuable "Learn at Lunch" seminar series for EH&S professionals from area companies. In addition, Clay and Tom will present a one-day training course for environmental professionals on federal and state air quality regulations and permitting requirements on June 18 in Milwaukee.
