ALISON.com has today announced the launch of a free online course, 'Recording of Business Transactions in Accounting,' aimed at entrepreneurs, business professionals or anyone interested in accounting as a future career.

Business has never had to confront the type of challenges that it faces in today's global economy. Everyone is struggling to be more successful, to compete effectively, to achieve big bonuses or just keep their job and the temptation to cut corners to get ahead occurs every day. Cash management however should never be ignored and it is more important during recessionary times than ever before.

This latest free accounting course offering from ALISON is of vital importance for accounting professionals in any business or organization. It introduces ledger accounts and journals, explores the accounting cycle, introduces the six rules of debit and credit and then links all of these concepts together with interesting and informative demonstrations. Students then see how this information is used through vertical and horizontal analysis to assist in making business decisions.

Commenting on the launch of this latest course ALISON'S Publishing Manager, Suzanne Cahill, stated that, "This is the latest Accounting course launched on our free learning platform under our Business and Enterprise Skills category. The importance of keeping accurate financial records cannot be overemphasized and employing proper accounting practices will allow your business to thrive while others unfortunately go to the wall. Thankfully ALISON can help business professionals worldwide in this area for free."

Reporting of Business Transactions in Accounting, through Alison.com, is an equivalent standard to FETAC Level 5 and QCF (UK) Level 3.
