

What Are My Legal Options If a Car Crashes Into My Home?

The Houston injury lawyers of 1-800-Car-Wreck outline options for those who have been injured as a result of a car crashing into their home.

HOUSTON, TX, June 19, 2013 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Houston car crashes come in a variety of forms. When most people think of car collisions, what typically comes to mind are those involving passenger vehicles, 18-wheelers, motorcycles, bicycles, and pedestrians. However, less common types of car accidents that get overlooked are those in which drivers crash into a home or other type of building. Although they occur less frequently than other accidents, these types of accidents can cause damage or personal injuries like any other.

A recently reported Houston car accident in which a driver had a seizure before crashing into someone's home purportedly left a person inside of the home injured. Many have questions about what to do if they become injured in a case like this, when they are sitting at home and a vehicle suddenly crashes through their dwelling. Will insurance pay for this type of personal injury claim? Should a car accident attorney be contacted? What happens next?

These types of accidents can be caused by a range of things including drunk driving, distracted driving, vehicle malfunctions, and other issues. If one's home is damaged or they become injured by a driver crashing into it, it is important that those affected:

- Seek out the proper medical attention
- Take pictures
- File a police report
- Review their home insurance policy
- Contact an attorney for answers to questions about their legal options
