The Home Reporter and Brooklyn Spectator hosted a networking awards dinner to honor Lisa Bing as an influential Brooklyn woman in business

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, July 7, 2013 /EINPresswire.com/ -- In the most cut-throat business capital of the world, New York City, most people find it hard to stand out. Brooklyn based business consultant Lisa A. Bing does not relate, as she was one of 42 honorees this past Thursday, June 17, 2013 at The Second Annual Networking Awards Dinner for Top Women In Business. Bing has a knack for understanding her clients' needs and constructing a clear and concise plan tailored to achieve their desired results. She is an inspiration to women and this honor proves that her accomplishments have not gone unnoticed.

The awards dinner recognized some of New York's top businesswomen in industries ranging from public relations and investment banking, to law and health care. These influential women were acknowledged for their contributions to Brooklyn's explosive growth in business, economic and community development. Toni Williams, Director of Public Affairs for Con Edison detailed, "we thought Lisa was worthy of this honor because she has given so much of her talent and intellect toward solving the issues that non-profits and businesses face."

Bing works with executives in growing companies and with leaders who want to extend their influence. She offers executive coaching, helps leadership teams implement strategy and improves team and business productivity. Lori Pedone from Brooklyn Media group, one of several who nominated Lisa, said "I heard Lisa speak at a business lunch and her words and demeanor captured my attention immediately. Her impact on me and the others in the audience was palpable. I know that other women in particular would benefit from her expertise on leadership and empowerment." Clients appreciate her clarity and pragmatism especially as they navigate leadership transitions and organizational transformations.

When asked what this award means to her, Bing stated, "I am inspired to be counted among such an electric group of powerful, intelligent and strong women. This award is a reminder that what we do matters and pushes me to continue to grow and do more."

Looking ahead, Lisa is pleased about adding career content contributor for BlackEnterprise.com to her roster of accomplishments.
