DEMIN, USA, August 8, 2013 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Typically, web games always gives people a feeling of minor or shoddy, but RuneScape developed by UK's largest independent developer Jagex has its own strength to break this preconceived notions. It is the second scale only behind the World of Warcraft since its inception in 2001 and even won the Guinness-certified-the most popular MMORPG game records. After 13 years, the series has been launched to the third generation-- RuneScape 3. The exciting thing is that the developer announced at the beginning of the year to transplant it to mobile platforms including iOS, which was confirmed recently by official website.

Recently, Jagex CEO Mark Gerhard and chief designer Mark Ogilvie confirmed the release time on mobile platform in the interview with Forbes magazine, in which they also stated that smart phones and tablet devices are the backbone of emerging ecosystem with close link with conventional equipment, which is a prerequisite for the game transplant. Besides mobile platform, Mark Gerhard said it was possible to translate it to intelligent TV.Chief designer Mark Ogilvie brought some news of the game. It is said that RuneScape 3 is different from its predecessor, used HTML5 and Web GL framework to build it, which would bring the finer quality, perfect interface customization features and more intelligent perspective. RuneScape 3 mobile platform version will be added this fall.
