

Companion Animal Clinic of Gainesville Offers Domestic Pet Travel Certificates

GAINESVILLE, VA, USA, August 14, 2013 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Airlines are now requiring a current certificate of veterinary inspection for travel across states in addition to international trips. Companion Animal Clinic of Gainesville in Gainesville, Virginia, has seen an increase in requests for these certificates.

Anyone hoping to take their pets on vacation with them over this long Labor Day weekend should note that it's best to start planning now. In addition to the items they already anticipate needing during the journey, like a carrier and pee pads, travelers will be needing documentation authorizing any pets for travel, even if they aren't planning to leave the country.

Pet travel papers are becoming increasingly necessary for travel within the country. Most airlines are now requiring an up-to-date certificate of veterinary inspection in order for a pet to travel with it's owner. The certificate simply lets officials know that the pet has been checked and is in good health and free of any communicable diseases. Getting the certificate itself is as simple as going to the vet for a routine checkup. However, if the vet is not federally accredited, they will not be able to help. Only veterinarians who have gone through the process of federal accreditation are able to sign off on one of these certificates.
