

OnlineCasino.net is Pleased to Announce the Development of A User-friendly and Interactive Website

ORLANDO, FL, USA, October 9, 2013 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Online gambling directory, OnlineCasino.net (OCNet) is pleased to announce the development of an even more user-friendly and interactive website is fully underway and ahead of a scheduled January 1, 2014 integration.

OCNet visitors will soon have the ability to open a single user account for leaving comments on all casino review pages and blog posts, as well as start their very own gaming-related blog that will be fully integrated with OCNet's expanded community forum. Replacing its former Wordpress-generated blog with a private-licensed suite powered by vBulletin, OnlineCasino.net has temporarily launched a general blog covering everything from new casino promotions to gaming regulatory law updates, as well as archives from its former blog. In the future, several niche blogs will be actively administrated by OCNet, to which players can contribute unique content, or as mentioned, publish to their very own OCNet-hosted blog.

While it is clear the age of Web 2.0 is in full swing, OCNet recognizes that not all user-generated content is accurate and unbiased. "This has been a major reason why we haven't been too quick to launch our new community forum. We are taking a close look on how best to effectively integrate Web 2.0 features, while safeguarding against hackers, spammers and trolls", said Marieno.

"In the past, OCNet has moderated disputes between players and casinos, and the fact of the matter is that players are sometimes in the wrong. Whether sore from enduring a losing streak or negligent in reading terms and conditions, players will sometimes lambast a casino unfairly. The same is true for casino operators, who are often guilty of not being transparent with terms and marketing their promotions unethically. This is precisely why OCNet will have site administrators monitoring community activities and reviewing all content round the clock".
