

Denver Relocation Specialist Daniel Hilty Says Precision Discovery Move Good For Employees

DENVER, COLORADO, USA, November 18, 2013 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Denver relocation specialist Daniel M. Hilty, Associate Broker at RE/MAX Professionals, says that the recently announced move of Precision Discovery's California office to the Denver Tech Center is a very good move for employees.

Denver, Colorado relocation specialist Daniel Hilty of DMH Homes says that the recently announced move of the Orange County, California office of Precision Discovery is a very good move for employees wanting to buy a home in Denver. The New York based company is relocating its California office to the Denver Tech Center according to the Denver Business Journal's Dennis Huspeni.

He says the lower cost of living and much more attractive home prices than California's expensive Orange County home market work together to make the Denver relocation a very rewarding financial move for transferring employees.

"Employees involved in the Precision Discovery relocation should see about a 22.7% increase in disposable income if their salaries remain what they were in California, according to a comparison of today's housing and cost of living stats between the two regions. That's a sizeable amount of money for any family," he says.

Hilty says the median sale price for Denver homes is about $278,300 compared to $544,300 in Orange County, California. That is a 49% savings on housing costs, making a substantial improvement to anyone's standard of living.

"Anyone who owned a home in Orange County and is relocating from California to Denver can get an automatic upgrade in their housing just because of the differences between the two housing markets," he says. "This was a brilliant move, not only for Precision Discovery as a company, but for their employees."

But he says buying a nice Denver home is not just for those moving into town with equity from a house in California.

According to Hilty, renters can easily become first time home buyers as a result of relocating to Denver.

"Denver's healthy economy and more reasonable home prices make it much easier to buy a home here than in California" he says.

Hilty says he looks forward to helping Precision Discovery employees have a stress-free relocation experience.

"I'm here to help at the drop of a hat," he says.
