

Valet Storage Service Company Offers a New Way to Clean House, Once the Holidays Are Over

City living can be tricky, according to Box Butler owner Scott Sinclair, especially when it's time to put the holiday decorations away for another year.

NEW YORK, NY, USA, January 2, 2014 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Scott Sinclair, owner and founder of Box Butler (www.boxbutler.com), an innovative company that provides hassle-free storage services to the greater New York City area, says that when the holidays are over, apartment dwellers, as well as those with limited storage space, should consider storing their holiday decorations off site.

"The only thing worse than trying to find extra storage space within your dwelling, is schlepping it to an over-priced storage facility," Sinclair explained. "Let's face it, we can all use a little more storage space in our lives, but for most of us, particularly those who live in and around Manhattan, renting a storage unit is not always a viable option."

That's why Sinclair created Box Butler, the simplest storage option available.

According to Sinclair, Box Butler is different because his company does all of the moving and handles all of the storage at its own warehouse, which is located in New Jersey. All customers have to do is pack. Box Butler can even supply the boxes.

You'll be surprised by how much space you'll gain by storing just one box with us.”

“January is the perfect time for people to become acquainted with our unique service,” Sinclair explained. “Once the holidays are over, instead of putting your holiday decorations back into the closet or under the bed, you should consider giving yourself some more space, by storing it with us.”

Storage starts as low as nine dollars for a medium-sized box, provided by Box Butler, which can hold nearly all of the decorations from a small Christmas tree.

"You'll be surprised by how much space you'll gain by storing just one box with us," Sinclair said. "We're confident that you'll find even more items to store, opening up a world of possibilities for your living space."

The Box Butler has state-of-the-art warehouses which are fully climate controlled and ideal for storing portable containers as well as items such as furniture and sports gear as well as your own cardboard or plastic containers. Their facility is located in New Jersey, 12 miles from New York City and serves customers throughout the greater New York Metropolitan area.
