

K9 University Enacts First-Of-Its-Kind Free Anti-Drug School Curriculum

OKLAHOMA CITY, OK, USA, February 11, 2014 /EINPresswire.com/ -- K9 University, one of the top drug-dog detection service in the U.S., is enacting a complimentary anti-drug school curriculum for every school that uses their drug-dog detection services.

K9 University Detection Services will now be providing a complimentary anti-drug school curriculum as a part of their services for schools that use K9. "We are convinced that along with the obvious deterrence and detection that a good drug-dog sweep program provides, a comprehensive education program that addresses the effects of mind-altering drugs is equally crucial," said K9 University President and CEO, Angel Soriano.

K9 University is proud of their role in detecting and curbing the use of illicit drugs. Many citizens aren't aware that police dogs are prohibited from searching for prescription drugs but K9 University dogs can and do detect these drugs. In fact, K9 University, because they are a private drug-dog company, can be hired to search for prescription pills, guns or any other dangerous materials that a client has deemed as prohibited on their property. It is also worth noting that K9 University dogs are not involved in any arrests. K9 University simply identifies the substance and allows the client to manage the outcome.

Every dog used by K9 University is specifically bred, tested, handpicked, most are imported and all are trained for the specific job of detection. They never use retired dogs or dogs that have already been trained and used by other law enforcement agencies. K9 University's business expanded to detection services in 2005, when the company became more active in working with friends, local business, the community, detention centers and schools in an effort to help curb the widespread use of illicit drugs.

In addition to their school anti-drug curriculum, K9 University is also introducing another complimentary curriculum called, "Recognizing the Signs of Drug Abuse in the Workplace," which is being offered to the management of companies that contract for their drug-dog detection services. "We feel strongly that educating key personnel in recognizing critical human behavioral patterns, combined with drug-dog sweeps, is an essential part of mitigating the tremendous liability faced by employers when dealing with drug abuse in the workplace," said Soriano. K9 University also has a new, affordable residential drug-dog search program that gives parents the same tools that schools and businesses have available to them.
