Expecting twins? While many strollers now have the option to add a second toddler seat, they're not always the most ideal solution when you have two tiny little ones. A double stroller is ideal for outings when you're toting two, and the Hornby stroller may be one of the most versatile double strollers on the market. Able to be used from three months onwards, the two seats are independent of each other allowing for different reclines to suit your baby or toddler. The canopy and footrest for each seat is all-enclosing to keep your kids shaded from the sun. And one of the best features? The Hornby is designed to fit through most doorways so you no longer have to dread taking the stroller out and about.

For families who love to get up and go, an umbrella stroller is the perfect solution. Lightweight, easy to store and a breeze to travel with, umbrella strollers bring you back to the basics so you can focus on getting out the door and spend more time sightseeing! The Pender stroller is a great pick for a trip around the world or a simple trip to the mall. Unlike many umbrella strollers on the market, this stroller features a four position recline so you can go all day even when your toddler needs a good rest. Another great feature is its ability to work with some car seats, transforming this nifty little stroller into a lightweight travel system. (Perego Viaggio, Perego Viaggio SIP, all Graco Snuggly, Chicco Ket will fit).

Looking for something even more lightweight? The Sandpiper is the perfect getaway stroller! Weighing in at a mere 4.5 kg (10 lb), you'll travel easy with this stroller, which also features an adjustable carrying strap. A full canopy and an extended footrest keeps little ones comfy even after visiting that third art gallery for the day.

Of course, if you're not ready to commit to a full sized or umbrella stroller, a city stroller may be the perfect match for you. The Denman stroller has what every parent wants – reversible seat, large canopy, rain cover – all in a perfectly sized compact frame well suited to city life. A car seat adapter converts this stroller into a travel system so you can be sure you're getting the best bang for your back from day one until your little baby is ready to say goodbye to strollers forever!
