Houston car accidents like these are sadly a daily media staple. It's hard to turn on the local television station, or go online to read about top news items without hearing of the unfortunate circumstances of someone who has been injured in a crash. The extent of suffering for victims in these cases can range from mild to severe.

What is fortunate for accident victims; however, is the legal protection they have when they have been involved in an accident caused by another's negligence or misconduct. Texas personal injury law covers injured Houston accident victims who may be due compensation for medical expenses and other damages they have incurred due to a crash. The law allows for the filing of personal injury claims, which covers an array of items that may impact the financial circumstances of accident victims. Damages for issues such as pain and suffering, emotional distress, loss of companionship in the event that one has lost a loved in a fatal accident are also things that may be factored into a settlement or jury award.
