Five months ago Canelo Alvarez entered the ring against arguably one of the top pound for pound fighters of all time, when he faced Floyd Mayweather jr for the WBA and WBC Light Middleweight Championship. The 23 year old came in to the bout as a rising sensation and was considered a opponent that could potentially put a end to the Pretty Boy's undefeated record. Alvarez, had a record of 42-0, with thirty coming by knockout, and had impressive wins over elite fighters such as Shane Mosley and Austin Trout. Watch Alvarez vs Angulo Live.

The stage was set for one of the most anticipated, and hyped up bouts between two fighters at the top of their game, since Ricky Hatton challenged Mayweather back in 2007. Many boxing experts compared Mayweather vs Alvarez to the 1980 fight between the legendary Roberto Duran and Sugar Ray Leonard. Duran, entered that bout looking to take the fight to the inside, punish Leonard on the ropes, and take away his ability to box on his toes, with a constant pressure attack.

Here is where the comparison stops. Ray Leonard, is without a doubt a all time great and among the top 147 pounders of all time, but he did not have the defensive skills, fundamentals, and ability to counterpunch from all angles like Floyd Mayweather jr. Alvarez, was repeatedly stopped in his tracks with counter shots from the Pretty Boy and was nullified offensively because of Mayweather's defense.

Consider it a learning experience and a trip back to the drawing board. Alvarez, is still learning at just 23 years old and a force to be reckoned with for years to come. On Saturday March the 8th, the former 154 pound champion will step back in to the ring when he goes head to head with Alfredo Angulo. The match is scheduled for 12 rounds and set to take place from the MGM

Grand in Las Vegas.
