MELFORT, SASKATCHEWAN, USA, July 10, 2014 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Todd Naber is a wholesale grain dealer who operates a business in Saskatchewan. As the owner and operator of Naber Specialty Grains, he buys and processes a variety of seeds and grains for export to the world market.

Naber Specialty Grains buys lentils, peas, canary seed, canola, flax seed and oat products, and processes them at its on-site processing facility in Melfort. Naber Specialty Grains, and Melfort itself, is, as Todd Naber has grown fond of saying, "located in the heart of some of the world's most productive farmland."

The cropland of Saskatchewan, where most of the grains Todd Naber buys are produced, is divided into four areas. Melfort is situated in Area 3. Crop yields can vary from area to area, and like any agriculture region the areas are subject to various natural threats. Sawfly, a serious pest for crops, can be a problem in this part of Saskatchewan. Drought, on the other hand, is not as much of a problem in Area 3, although it can be a serious issue in other areas, particularly in the east.

Todd Naber is proud that Naber Specialty Grains is part of the backbone of Saskatchewan's economy. The province comprises forty-four percent of Canada's total cultivated farmland. A thriving Saskatchewan crops industry contributes to and benefits from the increasing local and global demand for food, feed, fuel and fiber. The newest agricultural economy to be developed is renewable biofuel production or agricultural biomass, which is marketed as ethanol or biodiesel. At 251,718 square miles, Saskatchewan is nearly the size of Texas.
