

QinetiQ wins £33m MOD training contract

Smi's Military Flight Training conference takes place on the 22 – 23 June 2014, London, UK

LONDON, UK, August 14, 2014
/EINPresswire.com/ -- INDUSTRY NEWS:
QinetiQ wins £33m MOD training contract

LATEST ATTENDEES INCLUDE: Allied Wings, J.F. Lehman & Company, Airbus Defence & Space plus many more

QinetiQ have just announced they have secured a five-year deal worth £33m with the Ministry of Defence to allow soldiers and airmen to practise working together in simulators before being deployed abroad.*

The renewed contract will allow air force pilots and army commanders to train in a virtual battlefield – even though they might be thousands of miles apart. The system links aircraft simulators, ground forces control tents, and even individual troops so they can train on working in combined operations.

“Simulation and synthetic training is an extremely important part of training our modern Armed Forces and... the ability to practise and train in highly realistic but safe environments is a vital, life-saving capability,” said a MoD spokesman.

Have the chance to discuss the latest contract with QinetiQ as they present at the 3rd annual Military Flight Training conference.

Helen Dudfield, Chief of Training and Fraser Bruce, Systems Engineer from QinetiQ will present on day two of the conference on: Transforming Training in the Digital Age – Future Training Visions: 2020. Visit www.militaryflight-training.com for more details.
