With more than 40 films to his credit and a litany of starring television roles, Getty had this to say about his music and the "Marcando Paso" sound, "My whole life, I've listened to Latin music. Brazilian, Cuban, Mexican, Spanish — that exotic feeling and the horns, those big brass sections. There's just something about the energy and that feel."

Spending the last 19 years as Ozomatli's lead vocalist, trumpet and keyboardist Sierra, more specifically describes the unique ABSTRAKTO collaboration as hybrid of hybrids and his true passion project. "It's a real human feeling – "Marcando Paso", marching, trudging steps in life... as sad as it may sound, actually, it's the opposite – when you are trudging and takings steps in life you are actually making it through," Sierra adds.

Described as a cinematic, alternative, Latin sound, the collaborative work, ABSTRAKTO, will be released through Getty's Purplehaus Music. Although the album is not yet released, it is piquing major interest. An ABSTRAKTO song will be featured in Robert Rodriguez's TV series "Matador" currently airing original episodes, Tuesday evenings, on the English-language cable net El Rey.

The eight-time Grammy-Award winning mixer Manny Marroquin, adds "ABSTRAKTO takes you on a classic approach that is food for your soul."
