After a disappointing season in 2013, the Texans are one of the surprise teams after two weeks of action. The team is averaging 151.5 yards on the ground and come in to their matchup with the New York Giants on top of the AFC south division with a undefeated record of 2-0, and ranked 8th overall in rushing.

At the start of the season the Eagles were considered a team that had a legitimate shot to challenge the Seattle Seahawks in the NFC conference. Philadelphia, has not disappointed and riding high in to week three at 2-0 after two games. The Eagles are averaging 439 yards per contest, which is 2nd overall in the National Football League and 32 points a game. Despite the great start on the offensive end of the field, the team is leaving plays on the field, with several dropped passes at the wideout position.

Pittsburgh,, is going through defensive line problems, as the Steelers are having a hard time defending against the run. The Steelers, at one time were considered one of the most physical teams in the NFL, but after two games the defense has been virtually non existent.

The Bengals are proving that last year was no fluke and one of the undefeated teams entering week 3. Cincinnati, is 2-0 and will have golden opportunity to remain unbeaten when they host the Tennessee Titans on Sunday at home.

Other teams off to impressive starts include the Buffalo Bills, who enter this weekend ranked No.7 in total points per contest, Arizona Cardinals and the Carolina Panthers.
