

Tate Publishing looking to ink book deal with Author Judith Hill.

Media, PA— Tate Publishing and author Judith Hill are working to have her book available in Tate's 2015 line.

MEDIA, PA, USA, October 20, 2014 /EINPresswire.com/ -- This author has years of experience and expertise in her field, and Tate believes this will be a win-win for those involved in training leaders of children both in school and church to help their children be the best they can be!

Director of Book Acquisitions, Stacy Baker said, "We are honored to have such an expert as author Judith Hill share her years of experience—what works, what hasn't—a real hands-on tool for those people interested in facilitating children become the best and most productive they can be. This is the story of a young mother in the PTA in the 1950's who started a discussion group in her school regarding helping parents feel more secure and confident guiding the behavior and personality development of their children. They found it reduced anxiety and conflicts in families that seemed to arise from lack of knowledge about children's growth and needs. This grew and spread to other schools, and eventually it became the Parent Education and Human Relations
