

InternetReputation.com Announces Jail.com Mugshot Removal

InternetReputation.com launches a new removal method for deleting mugshots off the Internet.

DENVER, COLORADO, USA, January 7, 2015 /EINPresswire.com/ -- InternetReputation.com, an award-winning reputation management firm, is proud to announce a new solution to a pressing mugshot problem. Starting now, InternetReputation.com can remove mugshots from Jail.com.

In the late months of 2014, Jail.com hit the web world like a storm. The site offers millions of photographs pulled from mugshot databases all around the country, and the site's easy-to-use format makes it a snap to search for anyone who has been arrested.

Within minutes of the site going live, client services specialists at InternetReputation.com started fielding frantic calls from clients who saw their photos on this website, and who wanted to make those photos go away.

"It's a real problem," says Bethany Flores at InternetReputation.com. "A mugshot on a site like this can keep someone from getting a job, a new apartment or a date. It's a serious issue, and we just knew we had to do something to help."

The technical experts at InternetReputation.com sprang into action almost immediately, using proprietary techniques that could remove photos from the site and keep them off the site for good. Within just days of the first request, the new product was ready to roll out to clients.

"We're proud to offer this product to our clients," says Flores. "We work hard every day to make sure that people don't face longstanding damage from a mugshot, and that means we're always on the lookout for new sites and new threats. This solution is part of that work, and we feel confident it'll help many, many people."

Mugshot websites have been around since 2010, major companies like Google have tried to help eliminate the problem, but the mugshot site owners continue to find new ways to promote and rank their websites. InternetReputation.com keeps a close eye on the industry and offers removal from more mugshot sites than any other firm out there.

About the Company: InternetReputation.com has been ranked #1 among online reputation management companies per BestSEOs.com, and it received a similar award from TopReputationManagementAgencies.com. For more than 5 years, the professionals at InternetReputation.com have helped both individuals and businesses deal with, and prevent, online reputation attacks.
