

New anthology, Looking Through the Rearview Mirror releases May 2015

A compilation of short stories and poems which draw from the past to inspire the future.

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE, UNITED STATES, April 30, 2015 /EINPresswire.com/ -- April 30, 2015, Memphis, Tennessee, a new anthology written by the members of Bartlett Christian Writers will be released in May of this year. Looking Through the Rearview Mirror is a compilation of short stories and poems which draw from the past to inspire the future. These twenty-four stories and poems will appeal to old and young alike. Elvis fans will revisit the nostalgia of yesteryear while recalling old hymns he sung in a little country church outside his rural Mississippi home. Memphis residents will enjoy taking a stroll down Memory Lane through old neighborhoods. Others will find peace, encouragement, and spiritual awakening while sipping coffee during morning devotionals. This special collection also opens the door to experience southern hospitality, ethnic cuisine, and colloquialism at its finest. Sprinkled throughout are precious childhood memories with grandparents and family, offering a blend of the bitter with the sweet. This book will be one you will find yourself reaching for again and again. Susan Reichert, editor-in-chief of Southern Writers Magazine, honored this project with an endorsement statement.

Bartlett Christian Writers started in 2010 by founding president Londa Hayden. Her vision was to help local authors throughout the Memphis area learn how to get their work published and available to the general public. Over the last five years, this writers group has published several chapbooks, which are smaller booklets of similar collections. Looking Through the Rearview Mirror is their first anthology project, available soon on Amazon.com and in bookstores everywhere. The group plans to offer more anthology projects periodically. Guidelines will be posted on the website when submissions open again. To learn how you can participate, attend a local meeting on the second Saturday of each month at New Hope
