Physical or mental injury inflicted on someone else because of another's negligence can be upsetting to the victim and to the entire family. Subject to an often complex discussion, negotiation, settlement or litigation, North Carolina law entitles personal injury victims to monetary compensation for any harm and loss incurred, including lost wages and medical bills.

"The cornerstone of our practice is a thorough commitment to the well-being of our clients and their families," said Attorney Paul Hefferon. "We fight hard to maximize recovery for our clients who have suffered serious or catastrophic personal injury or who have lost a loved one in a fatal accident."

Ensuring a thorough legal process definitely requires the experience and expertise of a solid legal team—which Hefferon & Hefferon, P.A. is recognized for in the North Carolina legal community.

"We have successfully resolved thousands of cases over this time," added Attorney Thomas J. Hefferon, emphasizing 30 years of helping clients resolve legal issues successfully. "We make every effort to provide our clients with the caring personal support and aggressive representation they need and deserve."

People in North Carolina who need credible legal help can also turn to the Charlotte-based law firm to explore their options, find out the fees and expenses their case might incur, and schedule an initial consultation, free of charge.
