

ToConceive Lowers Price And Goes Beyond Sperm-Friendly

ToConceive takes sperm-friendly lubricants to the next level at a new lower price

FT. THOMAS, KY, USA, July 13, 2015 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Whether they need it to help with dryness issues or to enhance lovemaking, many couples trying to conceive utilize a lubricant. What many couples do not realize is that their lubricant may actually be preventing them from getting pregnant. ToConceive offers a solution to the problem of lubricants actually preventing pregnancy and is now only $24.95 for a one-month supply.

In 2003, the National Center for Health Statistics and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found that 75 percent of infertile women experience vaginal dryness and lubrication insufficiency.

Studies have found that many common over-the-counter sexual lubricants actually contain spermicide. A study in 2013 at the Andrology Laboratory at the State University of New York Upstate Medical Center in Syracuse found that synthetic lubricants like Astroglide and KY products actually hinder sperm motility. The study found that Pre-Seed, as well as canola, mustard and baby oils, had no adverse effects on sperm motility and are sperm-friendly and appropriate for couples trying to conceive.

ToConceive, a natural conception lubrication, takes sperm-friendly lubrication even further. Not only is ToConceive sperm-friendly, it helps a woman create her own natural conception lubrication. ToConceive is applied on the clitoris, stimulating the woman's natural self-produced vaginal lubrication. "Right away I was very pleased with the product solely as a lubricant," said Amy Sherlock, ToConceive user. "It definitely helped improve the mood before and during relations with my husband!"

This natural conception lubrication naturally balances the pH of the vagina to support sperm survival. "It also transforms the sperm to give the sperm the ability, or capacity, to fertilize the ovum for conception, a process called sperm capacitation," said Dr. Ron Thompson, OB-GYN. "These are all necessary functions to get pregnant."

It not only helps with dryness and lubrication insufficiency, ToConceive also provides an optimal environment for conception. "No other lubricants can balance the pH of the vagina or help a woman produce her own natural conception lubrication," said Dr. Thompson.

When using ToConceive, the woman's natural conception lubrication increases and changes to capacitate the sperm. Sperm capacitation removes the outer layer around the sperm, helps it travel to the fallopian tube, and allows the sperm to penetrate and fertilize the egg. Research chemist and ToConceive user, Charlotte Cutler said, "what is amazing about your product is that it turns too watery fluid into the more fertile egg white consistency."

ToConceive is a daily use product, applied to the clitoris and genital region after a bath or shower, as well as before and during intercourse. This assures that a woman is producing her own natural conception lubrication, optimizing the chances of conception each month. ToConceive acts as more than lubricant; it also maximizes pregnancy chances each month.

ToConceive is available in one and three-bottle supplies on the ToConceive website, Amazon.com and Drugstore.com.
