Tom Selleck, owner of a 60-acre avocado ranch in Ventura County, California, has been sued by a local water district for allegedly stealing at least twelve tanker truckloads of water from a public hydrant during the current severe drought, and hauling it to his ranch, reports USA Today.

In cases like this, an experienced private investigator's day-to-day surveillance skills, video documentation, thorough investigation of vehicle owners, and witness interviews are crucial.

The Calleguas Municipal Water District further alleges it spent $21,685.55 to hire a private investigator to document the alleged thefts, over a two-year period, reports ABC News, quoting an Associated Press story.

The water district's lawsuit, reportedly filed on June 30, 2015, alleges Selleck's 60-acre parcel is subject to mandatory water cutbacks, as high as 36% in 2013. The district further alleges it has sent Selleck cease-and-desist letters, but Selleck's truck was spotted as recently as March 2015, filling up at a hydrant on four separate days, and delivering the water to Selleck's ranch, reports USA Today. Witnesses claim to have seen "a big construction truck drive by on multiple mornings," around 6 a.m., to fill up a huge tank on the back, from a City of Thousand Oaks fire hydrant.

The water district's civil lawsuit seeks compensation for legal fees, costs of investigation, and an injunction barring Selleck and his contractors or employees from taking water from the district.

Selleck's representatives have not returned telephoned messages and emails seeking comment, as of Wednesday, July 8th. Selleck, like any defendant in a civil case, will have thirty days from the time he is served with lawsuit papers to file a response with the Ventura Superior Court.

"In cases like this, an experienced private investigator's day-to-day surveillance skills, video documentation, thorough investigation of vehicle owners, and witness interviews are crucial," says John A. DeMarr, P.I., a licensed California private investigator since 1985.

"Without a licensed private investigator, you have no access to public record information, court-admissible videography and witness interview expertise needed to establish ownership of the truck(s) involved; ownership of the property where the hydrant is located; and tailing skills to establish where the truck took its load. Our 30 years of experience makes all the difference, in the service levels and innovative approaches we can offer our clients. Many times our expertise results in a successful outcome.”

John A. DeMarr, a licensed private investigator in Huntington Beach, California, has provided consistently innovative process service and private investigation services over thirty years. Always reasonably priced, his services are conducted aggressively, and always within the bounds of the law.
