Our interactive workshop will help to understand the typical environmental and social issues associated with shale gas developments and ways to construct effective management plans. It will help attendees get started on the right foot through understanding the underlying issues, how to create successful stakeholder relationships and earn the trust to help you stay there.

These themes will also be a focus at this year's Shale Gas Environmental Summit main conference including sessions

- on:
- Why are the public ultimately against fracking? How these problems could be mitigated?
 - Why is it essential for public to be informed? What may the most effective ways of achieving public endorsement be?
 - Why the UK needs exploratory drilling. Environmentally friendly approach to exploratory drilling, and much more.

Being such a highly topical subject, those who are interested in attending are advised to register before the 30th September 2015 to secure your place and benefit from the £100 discount. For more information or to register please visit www.shalegassummit.co.uk/ein
