TRENTON, NEW JERSEY, USA, November 9, 2015 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Since 1996, Gambling.org has established itself as a trusted source by carefully abiding by unbiased casino review criteria and staying current with the rapid changes of internet gambling.

Keeping up with constantly changing regulatory environments in the United States, Canada, United Kingdom, Australia and Europe, the Internet gaming sector now includes licensed and regulated USA Online Casinos and Gambling.Org has changed its official site to OnlineCasino.Gambling.org. Customers looking for casino reviews will also find new information on mobile casinos, slots, blackjack and video poker games both for free play and real money betting. The official site at onlinecasino.gambling.org will focus on providing mobile casino apps and recent gambling news.

With the popularity of casino apps and free-to-play casino models, wagering at online casinos has increased alongside this recent development. Players should ask themselves these important questions. Can the information source be trusted to deliver a neutral and impartial review of a particular online casino? What does the website stand to gain from its commentary? Is the website an affiliate of the casino that is being reviewed? These are all questions that most people have in the back of their minds causing them to take online website reviews with a grain of salt.

To continue innovating, Gambling.Org will be developing a lot of new original gaming content in 2016 and onlinecasino.gambling.org will be its official website for reviews of Internet casinos and mobile casino apps. 2016 is likely going to bring with it an era of "The Big Boom" of Internet gambling, similar to the big bang of the Universe, except with an exploding online betting industry comprised of various sectors ranging from casinos to viral online poker rooms, from sports betting to lottery and bingo sites and everything in between from fantasy sports all the way to binary options. "Our estimates are that the mobile gambling sector will likely see triple digit growth in the years of 2016-2018. The Big Boom is coming and its coming quick."

There is a very stringent selection process that a prospective casino has to pass before being approved by Gambling.Org. Besides the usual reviews of the actual online gaming experience based on the particular software platform being used and the various promotions, bonuses and incentives being touted, two very important standards are also considered before a casino can be recommended. They are accreditation and reputation, two factors which should always be closely examined before placing real money bets online. All of the casinos listed on onlinecasino.gambling.org must have the appropriate licensing and regulation in place and their reputation must have an excellent track record of banking, guest relations and customer service. Gambling.Org aims to offer detailed analysis and unbiased reviews of casinos online.
