

Take IT to the Clouds Sessions at Software-Defined Infrastructure Summit

SDI Summit shows attendees how to transparently shift IT workloads and applications to public, private, or hybrid clouds.

SANTA CLARA, CA, USA, November 24, 2015 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The Software-Defined Infrastructure (SDI) Summit announces multiple seminars, plenaries, and sessions focused on clouds to augment or replace local resources. Attendees will learn to use software-defined solutions to transparently shift IT to public, private, or hybrid clouds. As a result, IT managers can use clouds for data storage, applications, or services on an as needed basis. Key program highlights include:

- All-day seminars on OpenStack, Ceph, and software-defined storage
- Plenaries on software-defined data centers, SDI in 2025, user implementations, and top ten things you need to know about SDI today
- Sessions on hyperconvergence, containers and Docker, software-defined storage, distributed systems software, software issues, infrastructure issues, databases, and automation and orchestration
- Keynotes on maximizing performance for varied workloads, hyperconverged infrastructure, a new open distributed application platform, policy abstraction, an innovation machine, and a vision for the software-defined data center
- Exhibits from industry leaders including IBM, SuperMicro, DataCore Software, TransCirrus, and many others

The SDI Summit is a three-day event including all-day seminars, free plenary sessions, and a VC Forum on creating successful startups. The Summit keynote lineup features Microsoft, Cisco, Intel, Red Hat, VMware, IBM, Nano Global, and Nexenta.
