-- After almost a decade in the car transporting business, Executive Auto Shippers (EAS) is adding a 3rd party

logistics (3PL) division to their business, named UrLink Logistics LLC.

“I’ve been in the [transportation] industry for over 20 years; I’ve seen what works and what doesn’t,” said Matthew Van Gelder, CEO of UrLink. “We know that the business standards we’ve built with EAS will also make for a competitive logistics company.” These standards are reliability, integrity, and, most importantly according to Van Gelder, customer satisfaction.

If our business customers’ don’t see their profit margins go up after a period of time [while working with UrLink], then we haven’t been successful, no matter how well shipments have gone

Matthew Van Gelder

Van Gelder goes on to say that his companies aren’t focused on numbers as much as satisfied customers. “Our coordinators don’t have sales awards hanging in their cubicles, but real reviews that customers have specifically mentioned them in. If our business customers’ don’t see their profit margins go up after a period of time [while working with UrLink], then we haven’t been successful, no matter how well shipments have gone,” explains Van Gelder.
