

Locking Mailbox and Parcel Vaults Help Deter Tax Fraud

Protect Personal Information and Packages from Mail Theft

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLORADO, UNITED STATES, January 18, 2016 /EINPresswire.com/ -- According to the 2015 U.S. Postal Inspection Service Annual Report, the Service received 97,000 complaints from consumers and businesses regarding attempts to steal mail. Sophisticated and organized mail theft gangs in several states steal mail containing personal information to conduct tax refund fraud. Individuals and businesses can protect sensitive information with locking mail and parcel receptacles.

A leading manufacturer of locking mailboxes, dVault, issued a statement on how their patented technology can deter identity theft. "A locking mailbox is one of the simplest ways to keep your mail and parcels from being stolen. All dVault mailboxes and collection units are specifically designed to deter mail theft. Whether it is the package-drop door mechanism that blocks hands from reaching in, or the anti-pry design, thieves cannot access a dVault, leaving your identity and mail secure," said dVault President, Greg Driscoll.

According to 100firsthits.com, in 2014 and 2015, shipping of residential and business online orders increased 40% and CNBC reported that the number of parcels reported stolen had increased to 23 million. "Mail and package thieves are pretty bold. Television news frequently shows videos of "porch pirates" walking up to a door and stealing a package or mail from a mailbox or porch in broad daylight. A collection solution from dVault provides the security and peace of mind that your mail and purchases are safe from being stolen," said Driscoll.

dVault manufactures a variety of locking collection units including mailboxes and parcel vaults and are approved by the United States Postal Service. To learn more about secure mail and parcel solutions, visit www.dvault.com.
