Velofix certified mechanics come to your home or business and repair your bike.

Velofix CEO and Co-Founder Chris Guillemet is thrilled about the growth and says, "When we started this business three years ago we knew providing mobile bike repair would be a great idea that would fill a gap in the cycling industry. With the onboarding of these new territories more cyclists can experience the premium service experience Velofix promises to deliver to each customer."

Cycling is at an interesting time in history where the demand for bikes is high, but the ability to have those bikes conveniently and efficiently serviced is a major challenge. Velofix helps fix this problem by offering riders convenient mobile service at their home or business ultimately allowing riders to save time and ride more.

Velofix offers a unique, premium service where customers to book online, choose their service package, select a time convenient for them, and enjoy a coffee (or two!) while their bike is being repaired by a friendly, certified mechanic.

Founded with a passion for cycling, Velofix launched in Vancouver in 2012 by Chris Guillemet, Boris Martin and Davide Xausa, who share a common belief that bicycles can help change the world. In 2014, Velofix was featured on the CBC's Dragons Den, which resulted in significant media coverage, and Jim Treliving coming on board as an investor and advisor. In addition, Charles Chang of Lyra Growth Partners (who recently sold Vega/Sequel Naturals) has joined as an investor. For 2016, Velofix will be operating in every major Canadian market, and has plans to expand to a total of 75 franchises across North America.
