

Investing.co.uk Announces New Trader Counsel Services

LONDON, UK, February 2, 2016 /EINPresswire.com/ -- British financial news source Investing.co.uk has announced that it will now be offering the benefit of its legal counsel and account advisers at no cost to traders dealing with disreputable brokers. This move is made to help traders with the best industry support, as well as to discourage brokerages that seek to defraud the traders they work with.

It is no secret that Forex and binary options trading have become two of the most popular and lucrative methods of making money in the markets. The power of the internet now allows investors to execute trades from the comfort of their homes with only a few keystrokes. For this reason, more and more people are now getting into the world of online trading, and brokerages for Forex and binary trading have sprung up rapidly to meet the demand.

Unfortunately, while the majority of brokers are perfectly legitimate businesses aiming to help their traders, there are always a small handful that give online trading a bad reputation. These few brokers usually operate under legal loopholes or in countries with a pronounced lack of financial regulation, allowing them to take advantage of traders who have opened accounts with them. Traders on their own can have a very difficult time taking the proper steps to reclaim the money that is rightfully theirs. Many of these fake brokers also make it very complex to find and properly communicate with them, further compounding the problem of resolving such issues.

For these reasons, www.investing.co.uk, a leading source of news and information about the Forex and binary options markets and the brokerage services available to traders, is now offering in-house support to traders struggling with illegitimate brokers. The online firm has been providing traders with the latest news and market data since 1996, and is committed to maintaining high standards of quality within the Forex and binary trading markets. Support services for traders who feel that they have been taken advantage of by a particular broker include legal input from Investing's own counsel and mediation between traders and the brokerages in question. These services are available to any trader with a legitimate complaint, regardless of whether or not the trader became aware of the brokerage through Investing.co.uk. Traders seeking these services need only register their complaint on the firm's complaint page to receive Investing.co.uk's assistance at no cost to themselves.

"As a part of the network that provides traders with information, we are firmly committed to holding brokers to the highest possible standards of quality and customer service. Illicit brokers negatively affect this entire market, and hold people back from trading who might otherwise be able to achieve their financial goals through these market vehicles," commented David Jones, Head of Account Management.
