

Tips on Why Individuals Shouldn't Hire Cheap Wood Floor Refinishing Contractors

Buyers Beware: Hiring a Cheap Wood Floor Refinishing Contractor Can Be Costly In The Long Run

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN, UNITED STATES, February 19, 2016 /EINPresswire.com/ -- When it comes to enhancing the beauty of your home, you want the best hardwood floor restoration specialist you can find. It is important to avoid making a decision based solely on price because using a cheap restoration company can really cost you in the long run.

Restoring your hardwood floors to their natural beauty takes time, expertise, and money, but it is a project that is well worth the research of finding the best hardwood flooring company in your area.

Have you ever talked with a friend who had a horrible experience with a contractor? Perhaps they used cheap materials, skipped steps, or walked off the job altogether. You can avoid such a nightmare by hiring a reputable contractor.

Your contractor should spend time in your home examining your flooring and trim. They should address damage and blemishes and offer solutions. Your hardwood flooring company should carefully explain the entire refinishing process to you, including the equipment used, impact on your daily living, and time expected to complete the project.

Red Flags

If your contractor comes to your home and only takes measurements before giving you a quote, you should be leery of trusting them to do a fantastic job. They are overlooking problems that could add to your quote when they pop up during the refinishing process, or the contractor may not address them at all, leaving you with a problem to fix again on down the road.

Not explaining the process is a tactic some cheap wood floor refinishing contractors use to prevent you from comparing their quote to others fairly. Your contractor should explain the steps they will take to restore your floors, from stripping and sanding to repairs and custom work you have added; from dust removal to the number of finish coats they will use. Your contractor should thoroughly explain the prep work required and the immediate care required in the first few weeks after the project is complete. Everything should be in writing.

Avoiding name brands of products to be used is another concerning tactic of cheap labor. You want to know exactly what products are being used and how much. A cheap contractor is going to use cheap products. Isn't it worth it to know which products your contractor uses so you can research their durability? Cheap polyurethane finish can yellow and chip over time, costing you thousands to refinish again in just a few years.

Not providing instructions for the care of your newly refinished floors can completely ruin the project you just paid for. You may need to avoid any shoes or furnishings on the finished floors for a period of time. You will be eager to replace your furniture and, without careful instructions, you might scratch the finish before it is fully cured. Shoes may leave prints that will have to be buffed out and repaired, with your family fully responsible for the added cost.

Lawsuits are prevalent in the world of contractors. Sure, you might get the job completed or get your money back eventually, but is it worth the hassle of leaving a project unfinished for months and laying out money for the legal process in the interim? Avoiding the pitfalls of cheap contract work will save you money, time, and headaches.

What to Look For

One of the first things you should look for in hiring a reputable contractor is industry certification. This proves the company has had continued training in industry best practices and will be up to date on the newest finishing products and techniques. Furthermore, there should be a willingness to provide reviews and referrals. Cheap contractors don't tend to keep up with their past customers.

The wood floor refinishing contractor you use should be able to tell you whether their finishers are employees or subcontractors. Employees will be trained under the company's standards while a subcontractor does the work their own way. Look for consistency in referrals! Royal Wood Floors, recently expanding from Wisconsin to New Tampa, Florida, is a company who believes in this practice.

"We do not delegate our projects to unqualified subcontractors," says Keith Allman, owner of Royal Wood Floors. "Our staff are wood floor professionals with over 17 years of experience.". What this means for our customers is that their projects are completed by experienced professionals whose competence is recognized by a third party."
