

Four-time Olympian Endorses the Running Belt Max Brand Running Waist Pack

Ruben Gonzalez, the only Olympian to compete in four Winter Olympics in four different decades, says the Running Belt Max is tops and worthy of a Gold Medal.

ASHEBORO, NORTH CAROLINA, UNITED STATES, July 25, 2016 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Four-time Olympian Ruben Gonzalez, who competed in the Luge event in four Winter Olympics in four different decades— the only person to achieve this goal— is a big fan of the Running Belt Max running belt.

Running Belts have been increasing in popularity over the past few years. These are essentially sporty fanny packs, but they're nothing like the bulky fanny packs of yesteryear. These belts are thin, light-weight, and usually waterproof. They are mostly preferred over armbands because of their ability to hold more essentials like cell phones, keys, medications, gel packs, and more.

Ruben Gonzalez, who resides in Colorado Springs, Colorado, has since retired from Olympic Luge racing, but he still enjoys exercising and other activities such as running and being outdoors. He bought a Running Belt Max to use for cycling, and he liked the running waist pack so much, he sent the company a testimonial as well as photos of him wearing the running belt.

"Whether you are jogging, biking, hiking, or even spending a vacation at Disneyland, the Running Belt Max is great. It's light, comfortable and designed to be practical. It deserves a Gold Medal!", Ruben wrote.

The president of Running Belt Max, Dave Chandler, has received more than 400 testimonials and positive reviews on Amazon.com. His running belt is so popular; he's having difficulty keeping up with the demand since the introduction of the belt in early January of this year.

"We've developed a sleek, attractive and water-resistant running belt that thousands of people are now enjoying", says Dave Chandler. "We're noticing it's not just runners who prefer our belt. People who walk their dogs, go hiking, or simply go shopping really love the Running Belt Max, Dave explains. “Our waist pack is really popular among theme park visitors as it can carry many essentials without added bulk, and since it’s highly water resistant, people can wear it on water rides and their electronics will stay protected.”

The Running Belt Max is available on Amazon.com. To purchase the running belt or to find out more information about it, visit their Amazon product page directly here:
