About Biochips

Bio-microsystems are a group of integrated and miniaturized devices that are used in biochemical reactions and biological monitoring, diagnostics, research and development, and therapy. Some of the advantages of using bio-microsystems are integrated intelligence, parallelism, low cost, redundancy, and speed. A biochip is an example of a bio-microsystem; it is a collection of microarrays organized on a solid substrate, allowing thousands of complex biochemical reactions, including decoding genes, in less time.

Research analysts forecast the global Biochips market to grow at a CAGR of 17.02% during the period 2016-2020.
