Poke Trainer, the latest companion app for Pokemon Go helps players catch new friendships, teammates, and relations that may never have been possible.

FORT MYERS, FLORIDA, UNITED STATES, August 15, 2016

/EINPresswire.com/ -- Poke Trainer, the latest companion app for Pokemon Go helps players catch new friendships, teammates, and relations that may never have been possible. The app is available for IOS in the Apple "App" Store and has over two-thousand beta testers ready for the initial release.

Poke Trainer creator Jeffrey Shafer paired up two platonic friends one evening trying to catch Pokémon together. He quickly created a Facebook business page and placed an ad to gauge millennials interest in the idea. Without any UI design, website, or actual content, the post had over 1,000 likes in three days, Shafer knew he was on to something. Poke Trainer is a location-based companion app that connects Pokémon Go players by team, level of experience, and how they wish to hunt; all while providing health information to each trainer.

Jeffrey Shafer, creator of the app says, "Poke Trainer is a friendship app first and foremost. No matter how infrequent or often you play Pokemon Go, there will always be a trainer for your skill level and interest".

Poke Trainers are not only using the app to find friends, teammates, and connections but for those living in large metro areas will be able to group chat to let others know what Pokémon is around them. The 'Poke Health' feature tracks miles walked, calories burnt, and time played while using the app. The more a trainer uses their 'poke health' the closer the match will be. Thus pairing more active users together.

"Whether you're a college student or busy parent with the Poke Trainer companion app, you'll never have to pogo {Pokemon Go} alone again,” says Shafer.

Poke Trainer encourages those who play to 'catch em' in pairs or groups, especially if visiting unfamiliar areas.

“Safely vetting other players is important for the continued success of Pokemon Go and future augmented reality {AR} games. I want to help make this new way of gaming social, safe and sound,” said Shafer.
