

Emergency management certification to be conducted in Dubai

Managing a versatility of incidents like fires, explosions, gas leaks, etc need a very strategic and precise level of emergency preparation to avoid incident.

DUBAI, UNITED ARAB EMIRATES, August 19, 2016 /EINPresswire.com/ -- With the GCC region bracing itself to host mega events like the EXPO 2020 and World Cup 2022, its extremely important that all stakeholders of critical infrastructure i.e. government, energy and utilities sector enhance emergency response resilience and build a comprehensive crisis and risk management system.

Managing a versatility of incidents like fires, explosions, gas leaks, turbine leaks, oil spills, radioactive issues etc need a very strategic and precise level of emergency preparation to avoid incidents from turning into a nation wide crisis.

IQPC Middle East, with the support of Dubai Municipality and the International Association of Emergency Managers will be organising a 2-day conference (5-6 October, Dubai) and the Global Professional Development Training Certification (GPDTTC) that will enable attendees to put themselves in the role of an emergency manager for crisis situations and cover the entire roadmap from risk assessment planning, incident response, crisis communication and coordination with the right remediation and recovery process from emergencies.

This certification has been developed after extensive research by the Federal Emergency Management Agency and IAEM has certified over 9000 professionals globally over the past 30 years. The 2-day event will be a combination of case studies, keynotes and certification sessions for all the attendees.
