

FICO Pro David Howe Displeased with Senator Sherrod Brown's Office following Federal Crime involving Child's Identity

SubscriberWise CEO and child protector David Howe reaches out to Senator Sherrod Brown for help solving a child identity fraud but frustrated by buck passing.

WASHINGTON, D.C., U.S.A., August 24, 2016 /EINPresswire.com/ -- SubscriberWise®, the leading provider of analytics driven subscriber decision management technology and the nation's largest issuing consumer reporting agency for the communications industry, announced that the company president yesterday contacted Senator Sherrod Brown's office following the misuse of a child's identity. The CEO firmly engaged a staff member who gave little concern for the serious issue intended for the lawmaker. According to SubscriberWise, Congress has failed to address the unabated assault on the nation's innocent and defenseless children.

"Today I attempted to schedule a meeting with Senator Sherrod Brown," said David Howe, president of SubscriberWise. "I contacted the Senator moments after I exposed another federal application fraud involving the use of a minor child's social security number and a falsified date of birth. Although I was ultimately provided an email address to request an appointment, the initial contact was nothing more than an attempt to 'pass the buck'.

"There was little regard for the legislative concerns I was attempting to articulate including the solutions I've been trying to implement for the past several years," argued Howe.

"I'm very disappointed in Senator Brown's office. I voted for the Senator every time since his entry into office," continued Howe. "Today my frustrations reached a boiling point. But the complacency and lack of concern from the lawmaker's staff will not dissuade or deter me. I will continue my efforts to protect children from this very common crime, which is neither reported nor prosecuted, but whose victims often suffer long and alone
