HVAC systems enhance air quality in commercial establishments through ventilation and filtration, thereby ensuring thermal balance in the environment. These systems use heat exchangers, pumps, and fans to control and regulate humidity and temperature levels. Parameters such as heating and cooling, along with the air quality of the outdoor or indoor environment determine the type of HVAC system required.

Traditional HVAC systems that are used in commercial applications consume a large amount of electricity. However, in developing countries such as India, which is a highly price-sensitive market, customers prefer affordable energy-efficient solutions. This has led to increased popularity of energy-efficient and sustainable HVAC systems such as chillers, variable refrigerant flow (VRF) systems, and air handling units (AHUs). Radiant and geothermal cooling systems are the other advanced HVAC systems available in the market. These systems function on vapor-absorption chiller-machine technology.

The analysts forecast the global commercial HVAC market to grow at a CAGR of 6.48% during the period 2016-2020.
