

"Generation Me: The Musical" A Festival Hit Is Returning to Hudson Theater in Hollywood Sep. 16

A brilliantly fresh musical which captures the tragedy and the humor in the inability for teens to connect in spite of social media. At the Hudson Theater.

HOLLYWOOD, CA, UNITED STATES, September 12, 2016 /EINPresswire.com/ -- At age 15 Milo Reynolds had it all - a seat at the popular table, the perfect girlfriend, the "coolest" parents, and friends who worshipped him. So, when Milo kills himself on Monday morning, his friends and family are left questioning everything they thought they knew about him.

Generation Me: The Musical explores the heartbreak, confusion, and survivor's guilt of the effects of suicide on those left behind. Told in flashbacks that open Milo's story to the audience like a mystery, Generation Me identifies a generation more privileged, self-interested, oblivious, and lonelier than ever.

Creators Julia Soto, Ryan Warren and Wil Finan based in Sacramento, conceived of the story several years ago out of their work with their own youth theater company, Flying Monkey Productions. Frustrated by a dearth of decent material portraying the realities of teens, they crafted the story of "Generation Me: The Musical." The show was in the top five finalists for the Hollywood Fringe Festival, and also received rave reviews in its NYC Fringe Festival Run and its Sacramento runs.
