SubscriberWise chief and U.S. credit czar David Howe provided law enforcement mountains of evidence detailing crimes against a 12-year-old-boy and OH operators

COLUMBUS, OH, U.S.A., September 19, 2016 /EINPresswire.com/ --

SubscriberWise®, the leading provider of analytics-driven subscriber decision management technology and the nation's largest issuing consumer reporting agency for the communications industry, announced that the company founder and CEO provided a representative at CenturyLink with critical information involving the theft of a 12-year-old boy's identity. The minor's identity was used to illegally obtain service from CenturyLink. The fraud was perpetrated using the boy's legitimate name, legitimate social security number, and a fabricated a year of birth to create the illusion of adulthood.

I intend to use details from this crime to advocate on behalf of this boy - and child-victims everywhere - by once again bringing these rarely exposed yet frequent crimes to the attention of lawmakers”

SubscriberWise CEO David Howe also notified authorities with details of the CenturyLink child breach and is preparing evidence for additional complaints with other law enforcement departments including the Ohio Attorney General.

CenturyLink immediately opened a fraud investigation during the time Howe provided details of the identity theft.

Unfortunately, at least one other Ohio telecommunications operator is a confirmed victim. The case is now in the hands of law enforcement professionals.

On Friday, September 16, 2016, Howe requested and was provided a police file number from law enforcement that will be used to suppress the child's credit file at Equifax, TransUnion, and Experian.

“Once again – and among the hundreds and hundreds of child crimes I've exposed – I'm engaged with the terrible crime of child identity theft,” stated David Howe, SubscriberWise founder and CEO. “And once again I'm dismayed because Congress has continued to ignore a myriad of pleas to solve this problem and protect our children with simple technology solutions that are so long overdue.

“Over the past 72 hours, I’ve provided law enforcement with a mountain of evidence to substantiate this fraud and to finally bring this complex and decade-long child exploitation to an end. The evidence provided to police included credit reports, a consumer-initiated payment inquiry, an unreturned equipment serial number, address history, telephone call logs, and dozens of individual audio records documenting the federal application fraud and the theft and exploitation of the child’s identity on multiple occasions during 2015.

“There’s zero doubt of profound victimization with this particular case,” Howe emphasized. “I intend to use details from this crime to advocate on behalf of this boy - and child-victims everywhere - by once again bringing these rarely exposed yet highly frequent crimes to the attention of lawmakers.

“Today I’m also making a public plea for CenturyLink CEO Glen F. Post, III to become informed and engaged with SubscriberWise’s legislative efforts:

<http://www.prweb.com/releases/2014/09/prweb12163889.htm>,” continued Howe. “Mr. Post, please meet with me to learn every detail about this profoundly under-reported but very common crime. Mr. Post, please join with me and help pressure Congress to take the issue of child identity theft seriously; the consequences of continued complacency and inaction are just too significant: <http://www.businesswire.com/news/home/20141010005493/en/CEO-Congresswoman-Waters-Congressman-Gibbs-Senator-Schumer>. Mr. Post, please harness the resources and muscle of CenturyLink to help SubscriberWise protect our babies and children at the federal level.

“I want to acknowledge CenturyLink representatives for their immediate attention to my urgent contact regarding this victim child,” concluded Howe. “It’s not the first time the operator has heard from the credit czar. And sadly, until Congress decides to focus serious attention on this issue and agrees to protect the most vulnerable among us, it will not be the last.”
