Life's become too fluid and volatile to keep up with surviving in a world of clutter www.viorasbooks.com—Owned by a disabled mother, Viora's books announced today that 12 Hour Work Days-Helicopter Parent was released on October 18, 2016 and is now available for purchase on Amazon, in print and e-book formats; now disabled from a hit-and-run accident on November 29, 2015, Viora now spends much of her time writing about her real experiences. She was married for 11 years and had two boys, now 10 and 13, before she was forced to abandon a good job with better pay because of domestic violence.

As a result, Viora and her children became drifters – drifting from shelter to shelter, state to state in pursuit of life. Not having a status by which to associate became such a drag as she could not acquire a decent job. Once that hurdle was overcome, Viora quickly got a job, saved as much money as she possibly could while she was still homeless.

In December, 2014, after four years of homelessness, Viora was ready to finally graduate from Family Housing in Inglewood, CA, where she had been for a year and half. When her time to be freed eventually came, she decided to relocate to Everett, WA. But before she could celebrate her freedom, hard-earned achievement, she was involved in a hit-and-run accident in which she suffered life altering injuries: a broken forehead, broken left leg, broken bottom jaw, fractured pelvis, and damaged nerves in her right eye. The driver responsible has not been found, to date.

Knowing now that she has a mountain to climb without proper hiking gear, Viora is working tirelessly to navigate through the clutter many have died trying to breakthrough. Being successful as a published author does not come by easily, as it is a sure fight with well-established, well-known authors that do exist in the field of book publishing. But Viora knows that no two people are the same, every person is an individual good at something others are not.

About Viora's Books

Viora's books opened its doors on October 16, 2016, mostly operated on online at: www.viorasbooks.com, although here and there Viora invites friends, family and co-workers to her home office at: 702 W Casino Rd, Everett, WA 98204 for book signing events.

Viora's books has published two books and many other e-books: The Numbers Game by Viora Mayobo, in which she shares her experiences about domestic violence, what it means to be a homeless mother, and abuse; and 12 Hour Work Days-Helicopter Parents by Viora Mayobo, in which she offers word of encouragement and her opinion of life on minimum wage grounds. Viora believes, given what she's been through, that there are no rules strong enough to protect women and their children, or resources to help victims of multiple crimes.

Viora believes more needs to be done to protect women and children, more, than men. Her husband has since been unreachable although he is everywhere on social media websites, hiding from having to pay child support. She has for a long while been trying to get her now ex-husband to help take care of their children, but, the system once again, has proved to be ineffective.

The help of every responsible individual is very important in helping create a system that works; our children have become casualties of a broken system, and that must change.
