

He May Coach Little League But He Writes About Murder

Debut Author John Andes challenges the boundaries of contemporary literature while helping children meet their potential.

LONDON, LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, October 28, 2016

/EINPresswire.com/ -- It is no easy task to juggle a such busy retirement, but John manages it and he writes to give voices to the victims in his books. The complex, flawed characters and plots leap off the page, in a quick fire style that reminds the reader of the great American noir detective fiction.

As a mentor for small businesses and entrepreneurs, while teaching creative writing and coaching little league, John Andes is a busy writer with 'Matryoshka' and 'Street Cleaners' coming out simultaneously through Mirador Publishing. The UK publisher has this to say about their latest US acquisition, "We are overjoyed to have John's books in our stable, he's a great and inventive writer. How he manages to write this consistently and help with his community projects leaves us in awe."

With a degree in philosophy from Brown University, John is well placed to delve into the twists and darkest recesses of the human mind and spirit. The complex characters, who are the mainstay of his books, lead you through a dark and ambiguous world of mystery and intrigue. When asked what inspires him, John laughed, "I love working with people, both energetic business people and energetic children even more, it's sometimes nice to settle down with the dark unclear worlds I create. The light and shade in life inspire the light and shade in my novels."

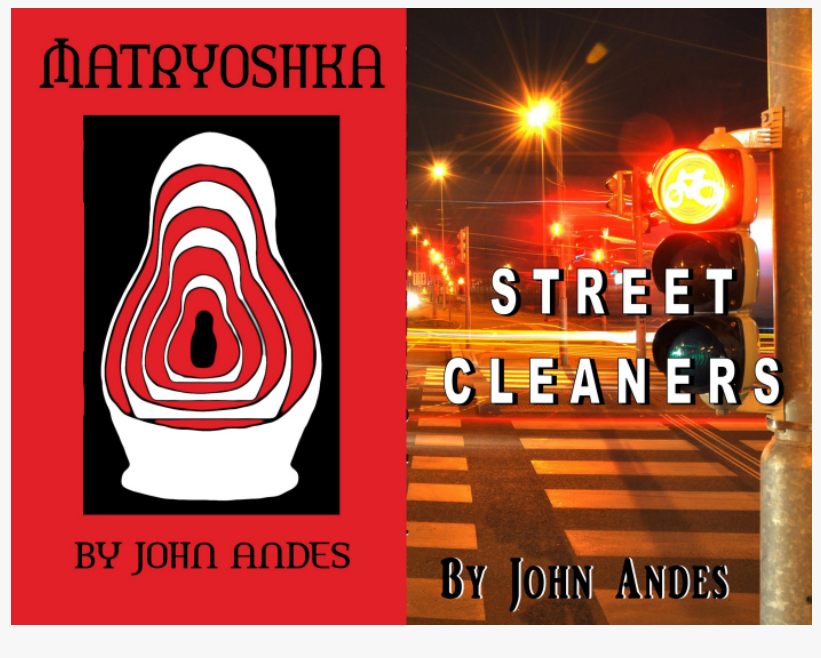

With the muse running freely through John's imagination we can expect great things from this long-standing and consistently clever writer.

'Matryoshka' and 'Street Cleaners' both are published by Mirador Publishing and are available in all good bookshops and online both as paperback and e-book.
